

April 3, 2007

For Immediate Release

Tavros expects to be carbon neutral at the end of this year!

Tavros Networks Inc has just announced at the quarterly employee all-hands meeting that Tavros has committed to going carbon neutral this year. Essentially, that means we're going to invest in greenhouse gas reduction projects around the world to neutralize Tavros' impact on the environment.

We've been focused on this area for a while now. Our recycling program keeps about thousands of pounds of materials out of landfills each year. We use renewable power, hydroelectric energy, and passive cooling at our various facilities and data centers.

We know carbon neutrality is not without controversy. It is honestly deserved if companies and individuals don't first make an effort to find direct ways to reduce their impact. We'll continue to be vigilant about cutting ours, looking for creative ways to power our operations, encourage even more employees to seek alternative commutes, and generally inspire our team around the world to think differently about their energy use. (For example, in honor of Earth Day, we're challenging the Tavros Team to decrease their consumption by 20% this week to help build lasting habits.) We will continue to be deliberate about investing in offset projects that can verifiably deliver their expected environmental benefits.

We think our offset program counts! Since this is a new and emerging market, we expect to learn as we go, and we'll be transparent with you along the way. In fact, we'd like your help in all this — we want your inventive and creative ideas for potential offset projects.

Thank you

The Tavros Management Team